> My purpose was to hold meeting with Baloch insurgents and carry out activities with their collaboration. These activities have been of criminal nature, these have been of anti-national, matlab terrorist, leading in to the killing and maiming of Pakistani citizens also.
>
> I realised during this process that RAW is involved in some activities related to the Baloch liberation movement within Pakistan and the region around it. There are finances which are fed into Baloch movement through various contacts or various ways and means into the Baloch liberation and the various activities of these Baloch liberation and the RAW handlers go towards activities which are criminal, which are anti-national, which can lead to maiming or killing of people within Pakistan and mostly these activities were centred around what I have knowledge of, the ports of Gwadar, Pasni, Jeevani and various other installations which are around the coast, damaging to the various other installations which are in Balochistan.

> So the activities seemed to be revolving around to create a criminal sort of a mindset within the Baloch liberation and lead to instability within Pakistan.

Karachi, the economic hub of Pakistan, was another place where India surreptitiously but continuously stirred violence, terrorism and mayhem. Muttahida Qaumi Movement (MQM) (United Nationalist Movement), an ethnic political party, which has overwhelming support in Karachi, had been indulging in mass-scale violence, extortion and killings for three decades. Police and intelligence agencies have lots of evidence to prove that India financed MQM and also trained its yobs. Its chief Altaf Hussain went into self-exile in the UK in 1985 to avoid arrest for a number of murder cases against him in Pakistan.

THE THIRD PHASE

The activities of the second phase continued during the third phase that started in the mid-1980s when sectarianism took the shape of sectarian terrorism. It was a multi-causal phenomenon, having deep social, political and geo-political roots. Most importantly, it was derivative of the extensive milieu of the birth and growth of religious and jihadi parties during the Afghan jihad era and onwards. The regional impact of the Islamic revolution in Iran was also a tangible factor in
