We win the Ashes at the Oval, thanks to a spell of inspired bowling that Broady will become renowned for in time, and some inspired last acts from Freddie Flintoff. The same story I have been involved in – the one with Australian dominance – is finally overturned when me and Swanny lift up the urn on the field, euphoric to finally be touching it, only to look underneath as we do and see a sticker saying: £7.99. It was a replica from the club shop.
