8200 in later years. I feel proud telling about it, although I lack all the talents that today would point to a potential candidate.

Well, in those days my French was perfect.

An air force attack on Gaza during the cabinet meeting. Simultaneously, on the Palestinian side, a meeting of top leaders of Hamas and Islamic Jihad in Beirut to plan their response to the Zionist misdeeds in Al-Aqsa. Unfortunately, as in every year at Passover, several zealots tried to access the Temple Mount to offer a sacrifice. They were stopped by the police but this may have triggered the response of Palestinian youngsters who then started fortifying the mosque. This would explain the chain of events. Utterly stupid, except that, this year, the zealots have the clown Ben-Gvir to support them.

After the operation over Gaza, an attack on Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon. The assumption is that these operations will reassert Israeli deterrence and not lead to a war.

Until now, moderate Israeli reaction. Heavy criticism from Smotrich and Ben-Gvir regarding such moderation, but nothing beyond that. Netanyahu implies that this is just a first step.

Two sisters were killed in a terror attack, their mother badly wounded. The family, West Bank settlers newly arrived from England, was on its way for a vacation. The father was driving ahead with two other children; he heard about the killing on the news. The two terrorists apparently came from Nablus or Jenin.

More details on the brutality of police action at Al-Aqsa. Videos have spread all over the Muslim world, while Israel remains silent. No wonder that this inflames the Palestinian territories.
