reversed the decision. On the street, outside the park, right-wing demonstrators yelled insults at the “leftist traitors” and shouted “Kahane is alive” (Kahane hai), Kahane being the extreme right-wing terrorist rabbi whose party was forbidden in Israel, but whose members were, among others, the murderer Baruch Goldstein and Ben-Gvir, our minister and evil clown.

This morning most other commemoration ceremonies took place. While the main one at Mount Herzl passed off almost undisturbed, insults and severe clashes among bereaved families took place in Be’er Sheva, during Ben-Gvir’s speech, as foreseen. The evil clown insisted on coming and on speaking amid heavy security. Clashes occurred during other ceremonies, too. A sad reflection of the overall situation.

At the Tel Nof Airbase the commander spoke of an upcoming challenge that the pilots have not experienced since 1973 (the Yom Kippur War). Is this what gives Netanyahu the confidence he displays?

Transportation Minister Miri Regev, who is in charge of the commemoration ceremonies and the official celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the State of Israel, reportedly gave instructions to television channels to cut any signs of disturbances. This dumbo doesn’t understand that this is precisely the kind of censorship that people do not want.

Tens of thousands came to the demonstration in Tel Aviv, where the text of the Declaration of Independence will be read. Some 2,500 demonstrated in silence in front of the place of the official ceremony, at Mount Herzl, in Jerusalem.
