For part of the Israeli electorate, the present coalition is truly a gift from heaven that has to be squeezed dry for all its potential benefits. They will not let go easily. For the other part, apparently a majority, it is the result of dirty tricks engineered by Netanyahu to escape his indictments. If he can be saved, nothing else counts and the world can perish (pereat mundus).

Today, demonstrations against the judicial overhaul took place all over the country, for the twenty-third week. The former chief of staff and prime minister, Ehud Barak, called for civil disobedience.

The 102nd victim of the killings in the Arab community in Israel, in the last five months.

Sunday, June 11

The calm before the storm.

Monday, June 12

Two days to the decisive vote in the Knesset on candidates for the Judicial Selection Committee. Gantz declares again the readiness of his party to come to an understanding if the principles agreed upon are respected, while no public pronouncement has yet been heard from Lapid. Wednesday, June 14, is indeed a decisive date that will indicate in which direction Israel will move for the next four years. If the judicial overhaul gets through, it may be difficult to undo it, even under a liberal coalition.

In fact, Lapid, the formal head of the opposition, was quite busy today, as he had to take the stand at Netanyahu’s corruption trial.

Tuesday, June 13