silent that evening and the following day. And even a friend such as Chief Justice Haim Cohn privately shared his disapproval. In that sense, the atmosphere now is different, but will there be a greater readiness to act?

Tuesday, July 4 / Thursday, July 6

Multiple demonstrations, both in reaction to the renewed drive for the judicial overhaul and because of the dismissal of Tel Aviv's police chief, who was deemed too liberal. Large protests at Ben Gurion Airport, in front of ministers' homes, in Tel Aviv, etc. It does not seem to deter either Netanyahu nor the hardliners among the coalition.

Saturday, July 8

Some 150,000 demonstrators in Tel Aviv. A very large protest is planned for this coming Tuesday.

Sunday, July 9

President Biden has openly criticized Netanyahu's policies. In a CNN interview, Biden stated that Netanyahu had problems with the most extreme elements of his government, that the situation in the West Bank was partly Israel's responsibility, that normalization of relations between Israel and Saudi Arabia was a long way off, and that there would be no invitation for Netanyahu for the time being.

In the meantime, coalition ministers unleashed an unprecedented assault against the attorney general, with four of them asking for her dismissal. This, of course, is not yet on the cards. On the other hand, Ben-Gvir and Smotrich managed to scuttle the defense minister's plan, supported by Netanyahu, to strengthen Abbas's Palestinian Authority as a dam against the
