reports from the minister of defense and the chief of staff regarding the widening refusal of reserve officers to report for call-ups and the danger this represents for the armed forces and the security of the country, was canceled.

The PM appointed Yariv Levin as his temporary replacement and vowed to return by the afternoon for the crucial vote in the Knesset. He had declared beforehand that any Likud members who would vote against the cancelation of the plausibility law would be dismissed on the spot. One fanatic appoints the other fanatic to head the government. As the opposition does not seem ready to back down, this could end very badly.

The chair of the Histadrut proposed a compromise that the Likud rejected under the pretense that it was close to the opposition's stance. Lapid announced that he accepted it. President Herzog returned from his visit to the US and went straight to visit Netanyahu in the hospital. He argues that the national emergency demands a compromise regarding the legislation overhaul.

Netanyahu has recovered from the pacemaker implant and says that he "feels amazingly well" but has been asked by his doctors to stay one more night … The vote in the Knesset will take place tomorrow.

Over 900 reserve officers of the Intelligence branch announced that they would not report for service.

Former chief justice Aharon Barak spoke to the protesters assembled in front of the Knesset, as did former Israeli president Reuven Rivlin. In different words, both warned of imminent catastrophe. They, along with many other observers including myself, sense ominous consequences if Netanyahu does not agree to a compromise like the one proposed by
