front.” All that must be taken in consideration, but Israel has to show a readiness to move beyond mere words and more settlements.

What is new in the equation, and perhaps should not be taken into account but is of major importance for me, is the enormous outpouring of hatred against Jews, in other terms the identification of Israelis as Jews in an outburst of antisemitism not seen in the West since the heyday of Nazism. Actually, it should be very much taken into account, given, for example, what happened today at the airport in Dagestan, where a crowd mobilized by an antisemitic channel rushed to find Israeli passengers on a plane arriving from Israel. We know that the crowd got out of hand and that armed police had to intervene.

In the US, after Harvard, Cornell is making a splash: a student there is accused of openly calling to kill Jews. Nice, isn’t it? The Anti-Defamation League reported a 388 percent rise in antisemitic incidents nationwide since October 7, in comparison to the same period last year.

The number of hostages in Hamas’s hands is estimated at 239. One of them, a young Israeli-German woman named Shani Louk, whom Hamas paraded and filmed in her underwear in the streets of Gaza, is now confirmed dead. Today, Hamas published a short video of three kidnapped Israeli women and their statements (most probably obtained under duress) against Netanyahu.

Yesterday, the largest aid convoy yet entered Gaza: 33 trucks. It is manifestly insufficient. Therefore, Israel agreed with the US that, from today on, 100 trucks would be permitted to enter the enclave daily. The ground operation is systematically widening, according to the military spokesperson, but obviously one gets very few details.
