of ceasefire and the same number of Palestinian women and children from Israeli prisons. No answer yet. Israel authorized the delivery of 25,000 liters of fuel to Gaza. Strong critique from some coalition members: “Fuel equals weapons.”

The military operations within the Al-Shifa health complex must protect the patients and the refugees as much as possible. It is a moral imperative and would also give Israel the legitimacy it needs.

The BBC, generally rather hostile to Israel, interviewed an Arab physician and a journalist as well as some international health personnel after an Israeli commando backed by tanks occupied Al-Shifa. Until now, all of them, including the director of the hospital, confirmed that there was no fighting on the premises. The IDF was systematically checking the identity of all males between sixteen and forty to make sure they were not members of Hamas or Islamic Jihad. According to a military spokesperson, the troops found weapons and uniforms left on the floor, indicating that the militants planned to flee as civilians. No trace of the hostages was found.

According to Reuters, in their meeting a few days ago the supreme leader of Iran Ali Khamenei informed the political head of Hamas, Ismail Haniyeh, who had come to Tehran from Doha to ask for help, that Iran would not intervene in the war because Hamas had not informed it of its attack of October 7. The same argument was used by the head of Hezbollah, Hassan Nasrallah, in his response to Hamas’s pleas.

After being presented to Congress, a video recording of the Hamas attack on October 7 was screened to 70 members of both Houses of the British Parliament. In both cases, the incredible brutality of these images made a deep impression. However, there are 650 members in the House of Commons alone and more than 750 in the House of Lords. It is probable that no member of the Labour Party attended the screening … The negative (or shall we say, somewhat negative) attitude toward Israel and, often toward Jews, in the UK nowadays remains puzzling.
