Will the progressive wing of the Democrats lead to the defeat of President Biden in the forthcoming elections, because of his staunch pro-Israeli policy? It's quite possible. The progressives ask that the aid for Israel be linked to various conditions; the president avoids being pinned down and stays the course. Biden's stand is decisive in many ways.

After some gut-wrenching delays the second group of thirteen hostages was freed and a group of forty-two Palestinians liberated. In addition to the Israelis, four foreign hostages were also freed. Two more identical swaps are expected before the ceasefire expires. Let us hope for additional days of ceasefire, with the liberation of ten hostages for each peaceful day. It is difficult to imagine a resumption of hostilities with such massive civilian presence all around. The result could be a humanitarian disaster. Israel should find other ways to deal with Hamas, like liquidating its top leadership.

Fourteen Israeli and three foreign hostages are being liberated today. Among the Israeli children liberated, there is four-year-old Abigail Eden from Kfar Aza, whose parents were murdered on October 7. Her father protected her with his body. He was killed and she was kidnapped and taken to Gaza. Her two little brothers hid in a closet for ten hours before they dared to phone for help. The grandparents will be their family.

President Biden spoke of Abigail in very moving terms: "Thank God that Abigail is home. I wish I were there to embrace her," he declared. He also talked to the grandparents. His support of Israel is genuine and, of course, of utmost importance.

Biden spoke with Netanyahu. Both seem to accept Hamas's demand to prolong the truce, which will allow them to liberate all the hostages and
