As for dealing more seriously with the Palestinian issue, it is tricky due to the overall situation: today, the father of a child in a Palestinian school in East Jerusalem published the letter he sent to the Education Ministry, asking it to accept his son in a bilingual Hebrew-Arabic school, because in the present one the kids were systematically indoctrinated to kill Jews and become terrorists and shahids (martyrs) if need be. Apparently, this is not uncommon. A few days ago, a thirteen-year-old child from East Jerusalem shot a soldier and his father. These are the results of such indoctrination.

For some time now, I have wanted to say a word about the constant bandying of "antisemitism." There is a French expression: le ton fait la musique. It is quite apposite. You immediately recognize antisemitism when you sense hatred. Otherwise you have to be quite careful before hurling the accusation. It can be a matter of unexamined tradition, like for a Catholic, prior to Vatican II, repeating the traditional prayer on Good Friday: "Let us pray for the perfidious Jews." Many such Catholics hardly paid any attention to the words, as offensive as they were. Today, of course, people aren't so naive about anti-Jewish slurs and some seem to enjoy the immunity of free speech to make a splash and get publicity, particularly if they are in the media or in radical-left or radical-right politics. In the States, it's not only hateful but becoming dangerous. Yet, notwithstanding all this, level-headed criticism of Israeli policies has generally little to do with antisemitism.

Due to the onrush of measures, demonstrations, speeches, and insults, I almost forgot to mention two rather striking characteristics of our new coalition: the rarity of women in its upper echelons and its hostility to LGTBQ issues, aimed at the school curriculum. Why there are so few women not only in the cabinet but also among general directors of
