promises regarding new outposts not being kept. In short, one hears some cracks in the coalition structure on top of Avi Maoz's resignation. These are but early cracks at this stage. No death rattle yet.

Tomorrow the Knesset will vote for the first time for the cancelation of the Incapacitation Law.

An Israeli-American was shot near Jericho while on his way to a wedding.

On March 22, the month-long Muslim festival of Ramadan will start. It has usually been a month of heightened tension, particularly in Jerusalem.

The cancelation of the Incapacitation Law received initial approval (hatsba'ah tromit) in the Knesset along with a death sentence law for terrorists.

Huge demonstrations in Tel Aviv and other towns in "a day of disruption." Thirty-seven demonstrators arrested in Tel Aviv. Eleven demonstrators evacuated to Ichilov hospital. Police used stun grenades; Ben-Gvir exhorts it to action against the "anarchists."

Two Palestinians suspected of involvement in the shooting near Jericho have been arrested.

President Herzog called again for urgent talks. Former defense minister Gantz to Netanyahu and to Knesset chair Ohana: "Let's go to Herzog!" In the speech that followed, Netanyahu didn't say a word about the possibility of such talks; he compared the demonstrators for democracy to the settlers who torched Huwara: both groups were acting against the law … In the meantime, Smotrich declared with utmost earnestness, without batting an eyelid, that the State should eradicate Huwara … I don't think that anything like this has ever been heard in Israel. American officials expressed their
