Today, Smotrich's plan for the West Bank was disclosed in the news. It was written in 2017. Our minister starts from the axiom that no Palestinian state should be allowed west of the Jordan. This being the starting point, he offers three options to the Palestinians. Option one: stay in a Jewish state that will include the Occupied Territories (Judea and Samaria) as an integrated minority that, over time, will acquire Israeli citizenship and share all the benefits and obligations of the Jewish citizens, including service in the army. Option two: be relocated to a neighboring Arab country. Option three: for those who would refuse to move and who remain Palestinian nationalists, to suffer all the hardship of facing the Israeli police and army. Now I understand better what my friend Eli Ben-Elissar (remember him?) meant by peaceful coexistence.

Does Smotrich, who is supposedly an intelligent zealot, imagine that the world will quietly let Israel enact such a plan; that the US, in particular, will help? His recent foray to Washington has hopefully taught him a few things. But, intelligent or not, he has remained a zealot. A plague on him, if his plans haven't changed!

In Tel Aviv, hundreds of women joined the demonstration in the red dress of the TV series A Handmaid's Tale to express their opposition to the male dictatorship that the ultra-Orthodox would impose.

Netanyahu ordered the chief of staff to clamp down upon the reservists' refusal to report for call-ups; he also ordered the police commander to take stern action against the demonstrators. The chief arsonist warning against volunteers fighting the flames. Is the man unhinged? In the Likud, people are more polite: they say that Netanyahu is not himself anymore.

An Israeli car shot at in Huwara: two people wounded. Palestinian and Israeli delegations are meeting in Sharm el-Sheikh (in Egypt) to defuse the
