According to today's poll, a majority of Israelis were unconvinced by Netanyahu's speech and a majority thinks that Gallant should resign. Apropos a resignation, one doesn't hear a word from Herzog anymore. What astonishing courage.

Tomorrow, the twelfth week of demonstrations. Next week, as I have said, will be a week of "national paralysis."

Saturday, March 25

The protests against the judicial overhaul are spreading to the army conscripts. Thousands of demonstrators in front of Defense Minister Gallant's house. The only time protesters have harassed a defense minister in Israel were the protests against Dayan, after the Yom Kippur War. He was considered responsible for the initial catastrophe; Gallant is held responsible for the coming one.

Gallant will speak this evening.

Massive protests all over the country.

At the beginning of the week, a huge package of 141 laws will be introduced for final readings and votes before Passover and the Knesset recess. Among them, the "hametz" law and some others demanded by the ultra-Orthodox. In the meantime, the Netanyahus have been filmed having dinner at the Savoy; there is a lobster on the table nearest the camera, a non-Kosher dish if there ever was one. The two faces of Netanyahu. The ridiculous side of the drama.

Two Israelis wounded in a drive-by shooting in Huwara.

Gallant has asked for the overhaul to be paused. According to him, the rift has penetrated the army and there is an immediate and tangible threat to Israel's security. Coming from a Likud minister, the most important in the cabinet after Netanyahu, this may be a turning point. Three other Likud Knesset members, Avi Dichter, David Biton, and Yuli Edelstein demand the
