by the most various organizations, in an effort to initiate conversations about how to preserve the unity of the country. If this effort grows, it may have a tiny chance.

It may look as if my paragraphs contradict one another, but this simply expresses my contradictory fears and hopes. Sorry, folks, but the situation is loaded with contradictions, and I feel battered by contradictory feelings.

Friday, March 31

Much depends on the strength of the coming demonstration on Saturday. Some 20,000 people participated in the counter-demonstration in favor of the judicial overhaul yesterday in Tel Aviv. Netanyahu claimed 100,000.

Netanyahu may possibly keep Gallant, but tries to make him pay. He wants the minister to resign from his MK seat; Gallant refuses. He wants Gallant to apologize not only for the way he publicized his concerns about the country's security, but also for his having called for a halt to the overhaul because of its consequences. Not clear how Gallant will react to these systematic humiliations. In the meantime, MK Biton, the Likud chairman of the Knesset Economy Committee, called for his Likud colleagues not to accept the replacement of Gallant as defense minister, as, in his opinion, Netanyahu made a mistake in attempting to fire him. Biton will be punished for this courageous step.

Saturday, April 1

A young Arab man peacefully walking in East Jerusalem was shot dead by Israeli police. He was a physician who had just completed his medical studies. The policemen declared that he had grabbed a gun and was aiming it at them; they felt in mortal danger and shot. Their body cameras didn't register the whole event; most unlikely, declared a high-ranking police