generation to the next. Deng's effort to put in place a collective leadership with an orderly transition from one generation of leaders to another has not survived. It is, therefore, likely that a power transition in China may well be violent and disruptive, as it has been in the past. The very stability which is a constant preoccupation for a one-party state may be its inevitable casualty. Let us see whether China proves to be an exception.

Bethany Allen-Ebrahimian, 'The Man Who Nailed Jello to the Wall', Foreign Policy, 29 June 2016.

The full version of the directive reads: 'Observe calmly, deal calmly with the situation, never take the lead, and get something done. We should hide our capabilities, bide our time, draw in our claws, preserve ourselves and consciously plan our development.'

'Colour revolutions' refer to attempts to change the socialist character of communist one-party states.

'Full text: Report of Hu Jintao to the 18th CPC National Congress', China.org.cn. 16 November 2012.

'Xi Jinping Meets with Envoys Attending 2017 Annual Conference on Diplomatic Envoys and Delivers Important Speech', Xinhuanet.com, 28 December 2012.

Ibid.

'Full text of Xi Jinping's report at 19th CPC National Congress', China Daily, 4 November 2017.

Ibid.

Ibid.

China's National Defence in the New Era, The State Council Information Office of the People's Republic of China, 24 July 2019.

As quoted in 'Full Text of 2019 Defense White Paper: "China's National Defense in the New Era" (English & Chinese Versions)', andrewerickson.com, 24 July 2019.

Xi Jinping, 'Certain Major Issues for Our National Medium- to Long-Term Economic and Social Development Strategy', Centre for Security and Emerging Technology, 10 November 2020.