95. Koch and Smith in Suicide of the West, Continuum, 2006, also list among the six key features of the 'West' optimism and individualism, two traits that can loosely be identified with what I term self-confidence. At the root of optimism, Koch and Smith see myths of the autonomy of man, his essential goodness and the belief that creation is constantly progressing. Communism denies all these. An individual is only worthwhile as part of a collective. It is important to note, however, that both authors make it clear explicitly that the West in the title of their book also includes what is popularly referred to as Eastern Europe.
96. This has been very well explained by Roger Scruton. Although he is making the case for national loyalty, the lack of what he terms 'accountability to strangers' was a feature of Communist societies and continues to some extent to be a feature of societies in transition. Scruton says that, in the transition process, 'almost as soon as democracy is introduced a local elite gains power, thereafter confining political privilege to its own gang, tribe or sect, and destroying all institutions that would force it to account to those that it has disenfranchised'. See Roger Scruton, A Political Philosophy, Continuum, London 2006.
97. Riemen, R, To Fight Against This Age: On Fascism and Humanism, W.W. Norton & Company, 2018, p. 41.
98. Ibid.
99. https://www.kinosiska.si/en/dogodek/svetlana-makarovic-with-guests/ (Retrived on 4 August 2022.)
100. See Anton Kramberger, Positional Elites in Politics, Economy and Culture in Slovenia During 1988–95: Summary Statistics on Elite Segments, CESTRA, 1998. For other countries see Frane Adam, Matevž Tomšič, Transition Elites: Catalysts of Social Innovation or Rent-Seekers, Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Ljubljana (unpublished).
101. Joseph Stiglitz, Globalisation and its Discontents, Penguin, 2002, pp. 180–188. This partially overlaps with the analysis by Greskovits and Bohle.
102. Joel S Hellman, Winners Take All – The Politics of Partial Reform in Postcommunist Transitions, World Politics 50 (January 1998), 203–34.
103. Stiglitz, pp. 167–168.