Acknowledgements

First of all, my thanks go to Ion Mills at Oldcastle Books for the idea of a revised edition of my 2009 book on Eastern Europe.

Over the course of more than a decade, a number of readers of What's So Eastern About Eastern Europe have helped shape the thinking behind the revised edition with their comments. For new insights, I am also indebted to several authors of books about the state of mind of Europe and the world, most of which appear in the bibliography section and in the footnotes. I was fortunate enough to meet some of them.

I am particularly grateful to Prof Tomáš Halík, Rob Riemen. Enda O'Doherty and Prof Matej Avbelj for their time to read the manuscript and, of course, for their kind words on the text.

My thanks go to the team at Oldcastle Books: Nick Rennison as editor, Hollie McDevitt and Sarah Stewart-Smith in publicity and marketing, Steven Mair as proofreader and Ellie Lavender as publishing controller, who co-ordinated us all.

Last but not least, I am grateful to my wife Barbara for being my most faithful supporter with this book too.
