- Corruption cannot be removed without reducing the gap between the governing and the governed.

ON THE POLICE

- Policing entails a power to do, a power to correct and a power to reform. The police can be the greatest protectors of human rights, just as they could be the greatest violators.
- Honest and conscientious police officers steal time for their families while they live hand to mouth.
- One of the strongest safeguards of democracy is a professional and humane police service.

ON PRISON

- Being sent to prison is punishment per se. The prison itself is not for continuing punishment. The prison is the last place for crime prevention and correction.

ON THE POLITICIAN–CRIMINAL NEXUS

- Setting up the nodal cell* is not the solution for breaking this nexus. The root cause of the problem must be eliminated by restoring professionalism in law-enforcing agencies and ensuring greater independence of their functioning with accountability and transparency. The monopoly of politicians in appointments and transfers of senior police positions must go. Only then will the nexus be broken.

* Such a cell was set up in 1995 by the Ministry of Home Affairs to look into cases of links between politicians and criminals.
