Kiran's Civilian Police Division at the UN was 'a global family' made up of innumerable nationalities comprising American, Argentinean, Chinese, Dutch, Hungarian, Indian, Italian, Jordanian, Kenyan, Nepalese, New Zealander, Niger, Norwegian, Philippine, Portuguese, Russian, Swedish, Turkish, Zimbabwean and others. The CPD was involved in a wide range of activities such as drawing up operational plans, carrying out recruitment and training and managing international peace-keeping operations. 'All these activities were done with care and concern,' she points out.

Of her future plans, Kiran says: 'We are strengthening and sharpening our skills further to be able to offer a holistic and comprehensive model of policing with justice.' Asked how long she wanted to stay there (at the United Nations), she replied: 'Oh! It all depends. Destiny engineered my being here in New York. However, I will stay here only as long as is necessary and circumstances permit, for I have left a great deal of work back home …'
