12. Stanley Kubrick (dir.), Dr Strangelove Or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Colombia Pictures, 1964). Kubrick's masterpiece was partly inspired by the work of a former RAF officer, Peter George, whose book Red Alert was published in the US under the pseudonym of Peter Bryant. George became one of three scriptwriters on the film, along with Kubrick and Terry Southern, a novelist and screenwriter. The comedy owed much to Southern (along with the improvisations of Peter Sellers). Peter George subsequently produced a book of the film, *Dr Strangelove Or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (*Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1988), from which quotations are taken in this book.
