

President Kennedy (second left), British Prime Minister, Harold Macmillan (left), and British Ambassador to Washington, Sir David Ormsby-Gore (middle). Ormsby-Gore was a close personal friend of Kennedy. For Macmillan, he provided a ‘special relationship’ within the ‘special relationship’. Kennedy greatly admired Ormsby-Gore’s intellect and understanding of foreign policy. During the missile crisis, the two were in frequent contact. Kennedy and Macmillan spoke regularly on the phone. (Public Domain)
