18 (1966), pp. 74–97 (hereafter ‘Effects’) and Druhe, Soviet Russia and Indian Communism, 1917–1949 .

6. Bunyan and Fisher, The Bolshevik Revolution, 1917–1918: Documents and Materials (Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1934), pp. 467–9.

7. Gupta, op. cit., p. 53.

8. White, ‘Soviet Russia and the Asian Revolution, 1917–1924’, Review of International Studies, Vol. 10 (1984), pp. 219–20 (hereafter ‘Soviet Russia’).

9. Throughout this work ‘Home government’ will refer to the British government based in London, while ‘Indian government’ will refer to the system of governance in India headed by the Governor-General/Viceroy which ruled the British Raj and held suzerainty over the Princely States. For information on Britain’s rule in India see Ashton, British Policy Towards the Indian States, 1905–1939 and Roberts, British Rule in India, Volume II: India Under the British Crown, 1856–1947 .

10. McKercher, ‘Old Diplomacy and New: the Foreign Office and Foreign Policy, 1919–1939’ in Dockrill and McKercher, eds, Diplomacy and World Power: Studies in British Foreign Policy, 1890–1951 , p. 79.

11. Lowe and Dockrill, The Mirage of Power: British Foreign Policy 1902–1922 , p. 335–336. Warman, ‘The Erosion of Foreign Office Influence in the Making of Foreign Policy, 1916–1918’, The Historical Journal , Vol. 15 (1972), pp. 133–59.

12. Warman, op. cit., p. 135.

13. As quoted in Johnson, ‘Preparing for Office: Lord Curzon as Acting Foreign Secretary, January–October 1919’, in Johnson, ed., The Foreign Office and the British Diplomacy in the Twentieth Century , p. 57.

14. Maisel, The Foreign Office and Foreign Policy, 1919–1926 , p. 84.

15. Warman, op. cit., p. 142.