Politics During the First World War and Bishop, The Administration of British Foreign Relations , pp. 131–8 and 160–1.

47. Prior to 1919, anyone wanting to work for the Foreign Office had to be nominated by the foreign secretary and be interviewed by a board of selection before they were even allowed to sit the entrance exam. This, of course, meant that the candidate had to be known personally by the foreign secretary or someone acquainted with him. Larner, 'The Amalgamation of the Diplomatic Service with the Foreign Office', Journal of Contemporary History , Vol. 7 (1972), p. 107.

48. Ibid ., pp. 107–10.

49. Craig, 'The British Foreign Office from Grey to Austen Chamberlain', in Craig and Gilbert, eds, The Diplomats 1919–1939 , pp. 21–2.

50. Cromwell and Steiner, 'Reform and Retrenchment: The Foreign Office Between the Wars', in Bullen, ed., The Foreign Office, 1782–1982 , pp. 85–6.

51. As quoted in Maisel, op. cit., p. 19.

52. Steiner and Dockrill, op. cit., p. 140.

53. Cromwell and Steiner, op. cit., pp. 85–108; Steiner and Dockrill, op. cit., pp. 131–56; Steiner, 'The Foreign and Commonwealth Office: Resistance and Adaption to Changing Times' in Johnson, ed., The Foreign Office and the British Diplomacy in the Twentieth Century , pp. 13–30 (hereafter 'Resistance').

54. Larner, op. cit., pp. 124–126; Cromwell and Steiner, op. cit., pp. 86–7; Steiner and Dockrill, op. cit., p. 144.

55. McKercher, op. cit., p. 82.

56. As quoted in ibid ., p. 82.

57. Neilson, Britain and the Last Tsar. British Policy and Russia, 1894–1917 , pp. 48–50 (hereafter Last Tsar).