74. McLean, Britain and Her Buffer State. The Collapse of the Persian Empire, 1890–1914 , p. 132 (hereafter Buffer State).

75. Ferris, ‘Greatest Power’, p. 743.

76. Quoted in Kennedy, The Realities Behind Diplomacy: Background Influences on British External Policy , 1865–1980 , p. 223. Author of the statement is unclear.

77. Gallagher and Seal, ‘Britain and India between the Wars’, Modern Asian Studies , Vol. 15 (1981), p. 388.

78. British Library (hereafter BL) MSS/Eur/E238/11 (Reading Collection (hereafter RC)), Telegram from Montagu to Reading, 14 Feb. 1922.

79. Darwin, ‘Imperialism in Decline? Tendencies in British Imperial Policy between the Wars’, Historical Journal , Vol. 23, No. 3 (1980), p. 679 (hereafter ‘Imperialism’).

80. Major-General Wilfred Malleson had been sent from India in June 1918 to Meshed in Persia with instructions to monitor events in the area and, if necessary, to sabotage any Turko-German advance that might ensue in the aftermath of the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. However, Malleson soon exceeded his remit when he began to officially cooperate with the Menshevik and SR Transcaspian Government in Ashkhabad. See: Ullman, Anglo-Soviet Relations, 1917–1921: Volume One, Intervention and the War , pp. 311–15 (hereafter Intervention) and Ellis, The Transcaspian Episode, 1918–1919 (hereafter Transcaspian).

81. For example, A Collection of Reports on Bolshevism in Russia (London: HMSO, 1919), contained eye-witness accounts of Bolshevik atrocities from various people who had managed to escape from that country and make it to Britain.

82. Thompson, ‘Allied-American Intervention in Russia, 1918–1921’, in Black, ed., Rewriting Russian History: Soviet Interpretations of Russia’s Past , pp. 319–380. See also: Thompson, ‘Lenin’s Analysis of Intervention’, American Slavic and Eastern European Review, Vol. 17, No. 2 (1958), pp.