in chemical ink! Madeira, '"Because I Don't Trust Him, We are Friends": Signals Intelligence and the Reluctant Anglo-Soviet Embrace, 1917–1924', Intelligence and National Security , Vol. 19 (2004), pp. 32–41.

88. Report (Political and Economic) of the Committee to Collect Information on Russia ; Russia: the Official Report of the British Trades Union Delegation to Russia and Caucasia, Nov. and Dec., 1924 and Report of the British Labour Delegation to Russia, 1920.

89. One exception was Georgii Chicherin's Two Years of Foreign Policy: The Relations of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic with Foreign Nations, from November 7, 1917, to November 7, 1919 . Although even then, Chicherin says little about Asia.

90. Stanwood, 'Revolution and the "Old Reactionary Policy": Britain in Persia, 1917', Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History , Vol. 6 (1978), p. 113 (hereafter 'Britain in Persia').

91. Popplewell, Intelligence and Imperial Defence: British Intelligence and the Defence of the Indian Empire, 1904–1924 ; Fisher, 'Interdepartmental Committee'; Ferris, '"The Internationalism of Islam": The British Perception of a Muslim Menace, 1840–1951', Intelligence and National Security , Vol. 24 (2009), pp. 57–77 (hereafter 'Internationalism') and Madeira, op. cit.

Chapter 1: Curzon, Russia and the Great Game

1. John William Kaye helped to make the term famous when he used Conolly's papers as sources for his work on Afghanistan in this period. Kaye, A History of War in Afghanistan .

2. Meyer and Brysac, Tournament of Shadows: The Great Game and the Race for Empire in Central Asia , p. xxiii.

3. Together with Meyer, Brysac and Hopkirk, other works of interest on the Great Game include the multi-volume work by Martin Ewans which brings