102. Marx and Engels, On Colonialism .

103. White, ‘Colonial Revolution and the Communist International, 1919–1924’, Science and Society , Vol. 40, No. 2 (1996), p. 173 (hereafter ‘Colonial Revolution’).

104. Lenin, ‘Imperialism, The Highest Stage of Capitalism’, in Christman, ed., Essential Works of Lenin , pp. 176–270.

105. In his work on the Comintern, Edward Richards has shown how the organisation’s pyramidal structure placed greatest authority in the hands of the Executive Committee of the Communist International (ECCI) and its Presidium. The ECCI led all Comintern activities in the intervals between congresses, its decisions were binding for all members of the organisation, and it held the right to expel ‘entire Sections, groups and individuals who violate the programme and rules of the Communist International’. Since the ECCI and its Presidium was dominated by members of the Bolshevik party, in effect the Soviet regime controlled the Comintern. See Richards, ‘The Shaping of the Comintern’, American Slavic and Eastern European Review , Vol. 18, No. 2 (1959), pp. 197–204.

106. White, ‘Colonial Revolution’, p. 176. On a slight aside, according to Timothy Edward O’Connor, Chicherin was one of the Bolsheviks most enthusiastic about creating revolution in Asia, and was one of the first to see the potential there. O’Connor, Diplomacy and Revolution: G.V. Chicherin and Soviet Foreign Affairs, 1919–1930 .

107. Haithcox, ‘The Roy–Lenin Debate on Colonial Policy: a New Interpretation’, The Journal of Asian Studies , Vol. 23, No. 1 (1963), p. 94 (hereafter ‘Debate’).

108. Ibid ., p. 97. For more on Bolshevik opinion of Gandhi see: Ray, ‘Changing Soviet Views on Mahatma Gandhi, The Journal of Asian Studies , Vol. 29 (1969), pp. 85–106.

109. Blank describes this ‘conception of an alliance with the native bourgeousie’ as a ‘singluarly manipulative and cynical one’. Blank, op. cit., p. 184.