86. BL/MSS/Eur/E238/16 (RC), Statement by Curzon to the House of Lords as quoted in Telegram from Chamberlain to Reading, 15 March 1922.

87. Cooper-Busch, Mudros , p. 333.

88. Nanda, op. cit., p. 104.

89. Cooper-Busch, Mudros , p. 329.

90. In August 1922 the Kemalist forces had launched a counter attack against the Greeks, and by 9 September had captured Smyrna and were advancing on Constantinople. On 15 September the British Cabinet decided that it would stand its ground at Chanak, and the following day sent a communiqué to the Turkish nationalist forces threatening a declaration of war on the grounds that the Treaty of Sèvres had been violated. However, without support from France and the dominions, Lloyd George was forced to back down from his position. Although war was averted, the whole affair proved fatal for Lloyd George's political careers. For more detail on the Chanak Crisis see Macfie, 'The Chanak Affair (September–October 1922)', Balkan Studies, Vol. 20 (1979), pp. 309–341; Psomiades, The Eastern Question, the Last Phase: A Study in Greek–Turkish Diplomacy and Darwin, 'The Chanak Crisis and the British Cabinet', History, Vol. 65 (1980), pp. 32–48.

91. White, Britain .

92. TNA/FO1011/123, Letter from Gregory to Loraine, 21 Oct. 1922.

93. TNA/FO1011/124, Letter from Lindsay to Loraine, 7 Dec. 1922.

94. Much to the consternation of the Soviet government. For any resolution of the problems between Turkey and the Allies would inevitably leave Ataturk and his regime less dependent upon Russia. Kapur, op. cit., p. 116.

95. Gilmour, op. cit., p. 579. With Turkish support, the Soviet government also managed to attend the conference, but only to participate in the issue of the Straits. Kapur, op. cit., pp. 119–28.