175. Gregorian, op. cit., p. 237.

176. TNA/FO371/8079/N2819, North-West Frontier Province Intelligence Bureau Diary, 9 Feb. 1922.

177. Woodward, op. cit., No. 99, Telegram from Hodgson to Curzon, 11 June 1923.

178. BL/MSS/Eur/E238/12 (RC), Telegram from Peel to Reading, 13 Nov. 1923.

179. Poullada, op. cit., pp. 251–5.

180. TNA/FO1011/44, Letter from Curzon to Loraine, 30 May 1922.

The End of An Epoch

1. BL/MSS/Eur/D523/3 (MC), Letters from Mr. Montagu to Lord Chelmsford, 22 Jan. 1919. [Emphasis added].

2. Hence why events in South and Central Asia during this time cannot simply be characterised as a revival of the Great Game. If the premise is accepted that the Great Game was a mentality then we see that for the likes of Curzon the Great Game never ended, while for the Indian government it did not exist in this period. The game could not be revived if it a) had not ended for some and b) did not exist for others. A matter of semantics perhaps but an important point for demonstrating the complexity of British foreign policy during this period.

3. Andrew, 'The British Secret Service and Anglo-Soviet relations in the 1920s: Part I, From Trade Negotiations to the Zinoviev Letter', The Historical Journal , Vol. 20 (1977), p. 673.

4. Crowe, 'The Zinoviev Letter', Journal of Contemporary History , Vol. 10 (1975), pp. 407–32.