5. Bennett, ‘A Most Extraordinary and Mysterious Business’: The Zinoviev Letter of 1924 .

6. Nicolson, op. cit., p. 19.

7. Ronaldshay, op. cit., p. 383.

8. Aziz, op. cit., p. 104.

9. The reason given to Curzon was that it was not possible to have a prime minister who sat in the House of Lords. However, the fact was that not many of his colleagues appeared comfortable with Curzon in the premiership, while apparently King George V greatly disliked the ex-foreign secretary. Gilmour, op. cit., pp. 580–5.

10. ‘...I really cannot allow the tendency you have sometimes shown in your telegrams that if things do not go as you wish you will declare your disagreement in public’. BL/MSS/Eur/D523/3 (MC), Letter from Montagu to Chelmsford, 29 Aug. 1919.

11. For example: ‘I have felt the difficulty of my position more keenly than I can say...I have isolated myself from my colleagues...I wonder whether the sun will ever shine again’. BL/MSS/Eur/E264/6 (CC), Letter from Montagu to Chelmsford, 20 May 1920.

12. Mawdsley, op. cit., p. 239.

13. Bullard, ‘The Power of Menace: Soviet Relations with South Asia, 1917–1974’, British Journal of International Studies, Vol. 2 (1976), p. 56.

14. Ibid ., p. 57.

15. Carrére D’ Encausse, op. cit., p. 159.

16. Woodward, op. cit., Telegram from MacDonald to Hodgson, 1 Feb. 1924 and No. 208: Telegram from MacDonald to Hodgson, 1 Feb. 1924.

17. White, Britain , pp. 204–33.