In the event, the lack of police intervention boosted demonstrators' courage and on Monday 16 October, more than 120,000 pro-democracy activists took to the streets of Leipzig in the largest single protest in the nation's forty-year history. That same day, Bild reported that more than 20,000 East Germans, unhappy over the leadership's rejection of reforms, had cancelled their party membership over the previous two weeks.