By this point, Honecker was spiralling into depression. In a letter to Margot on 7 January 1993, he complained about his ‘witch trial’, confessing he could find hardly any words about the attitude and the actions to describe ‘those who do this to us’. Above all, health matters crowded his horizon – high blood pressure, cancer treatments and exhaustion stultified everything.

But then, things suddenly changed.