25. Another episode which throws light on the strained relations between East Berlin and Moscow came when Honecker introduced the concept of ‘Socialism in the colours of the German Democratic Republic’ at the seventh session of the Central Committee. Designed to illustrate that developments in the socialist world were more varied than many realized, the phrase was used at frequently at public events and in party literature. However, other than thumbing a nose at perestroika, the ‘concept’ did little other than emphasise the GDR’s past achievements.
