

On June 16, 1953, workers in East Berlin rose in protest against government demands to increase productivity. Violence unfolded with such extraordinary speed that the Russians declared martial law and sent in T-34 tanks, the same machines that had ploughed through Berlin in 1945.