(Focus Group, Private University[32]). However, students did speculate about the problems facing the province, with the majority highlighting the issue of foreign interference: 'MQM, BLA (Baloch Liberation), Taliban all because of "bayroon-i-mulk" i.e. foreign forces, i.e. Mossad and RAW behind them' (Focus Group, Government University[33]); 'Balochistan is rich in natural minerals. International players come and exploit as they have done in Afghanistan, linking the currency with the dollar, "currency politics"' (Student, Male, Quetta); 'But other agencies are also involved, exploiting these issues. Yes, there is the missing persons issues but other agencies are funding him. We need to find out the real meaning behind what is happening. You cannot allow a separatist movement' (Focus Group, Private University[34]) Q.: Who is this other agency/agencies? 'RAW – funding Mama Qadeer and BLA. RAW has been involved since independence' (Focus Group, Private University[35]). Abdul Qadeer Baloch, known as Mama Qadeer, launched a nonviolent protest against the security state demanding the return of 'missing persons' after his son was picked up and killed by security forces. He launched a long march with a group of Baloch men and women travelling on foot from Quetta to Islamabad (News 2014). He was denied a platform to speak to the public on several occasions since his critique of the security state was perceived to challenge the Pakistani narrative. Balochistan is Pakistan's secret war. Trying to discuss the issue in public or through the electronic media can lead to arrests and even death. A new form of terror has emerged here; this time, however, it is the administration terrorizing the Baloch and ordinary citizens who might want to question what the army and police are doing in the province. Sabeen Mahmoud, a social activist, was shot dead in April 2015 after hosting a discussion on the war in Balochistan in the Karachi T2F social forum that she had founded. While her murderer in his confession claimed to have killed her for her liberal views, as discussed in Chapter 3, the timing of the murder after a controversial figure such as Mama Qadeer had been hosted at T2F was nonetheless considered suspicious by members of the civil society. Balochistan is a no-go area for human rights activists, media and even academic institutions as was evident when one of the premier universities of Lahore that planned to hold an event about Balochistan was asked to cancel the programme by the intelligence services. Subsequent discussions with the military have revealed that they expect universities to support what they call the 'national narrative' and do not want universities to support students and academics questioning the security state's role in Balochistan. Despite this suppression of information in Balochistan the participants in this study were questioning the experiences of the Baloch with some dismissing Mama Qadeer's movement: 'I went to the missing
