3 According to the UNDP Human Development Report 2017 the number of terrorism-related deaths has declined in recent years in Pakistan, but it remains the world's sixth deadliest country. 'In 2016, it ranked fourth in the Global Terrorism Index of countries most impacted by terror, scoring 8.6 on a scale of 10. In 2013, nearly 1 out of every 4 young Pakistanis had been either victims of violence or had family or friends who were victims. Of those who had experienced a traumatic violent event, 41 percent reported suffering symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). In FATA and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, almost 62 and 35 percent of youth respectively were affected by violence. More alarmingly, of the youth affected by conflict in Balochistan, 80 percent were direct victims. Youth from Sindh have been so affected by violence that they believe it to be a serious threat to the country's very existence' (p. 113).
