a current government that cannot tolerate dissent, which was evidenced in the continued silencing of elected MNAs.

Yet, as the narratives in this book have illustrated, such crackdowns will not necessarily impact the wider support given to the security state. The predominant view of the most of 1,900+ respondents of this book is that the security state can do no wrong. The assumption remains that it is acting in the interest of the law-abiding citizen, even when it infringes on the rights of its citizens. However, what will impact the support of this government and its future is its economic performance and its ability to ensure employment and education for the Pakistani youth who are still hoping for a real 'naya' Pakistan.
