'national narrative' about the country that glorifies the army, criminalizes dissent and promotes an exclusive religious identity, is also reinforced on social media. Such criminalization of activity online is further problematic in a context where law enforcement authorities are ill equipped and lack training in dealing with 'online' crimes committed by individuals. Also problematic is the increasing level of fear and surveillance that such policies have reinforced among the country's citizens, as evident in cases of bloggers and activists being abducted for their online activity. The last part of the chapter explores young people's narratives to understand their use of social media, and the extent to which this medium of communication has the potential to promote political activism offline.

Notes

1 The discovery of illegal offshore accounts in Panama belonging to the prime minister and his family.
2 This was the third time Nawaz Sharif was unable to complete his term as elected head of state.
3 Enacted by Zulfikar Ali Bhutto to get the support of religious parties, not because most Pakistanis wanted it.
4 The use of education as a political tool is of course not confined to Asia. In Western industrialized societies education was also used to create what was in those days an 'artificial unity'. Generally today, however, education's role as a political tool is most visible in postcolonial countries where in a short span of time diverse ethnic, linguistic and religious communities had to be joined together under the banner of a new nation state.
5 See South and Lall (2017) and Lall et al. (2014) on Myanmar citizens focusing on the right to live in Myanmar.
6 Zia's policies created both radicalization and a powerful reaction across the civil society against it. The Women's Action Forum and Movement of Restoration of Democracy capitalized on the local cultural capital to militate against the project of radicalization.
7 See Zaidi (2013).
8 Pakistan's current population stands at 207.7 million according to the most recent census figures available (2017). Since age disaggregation had not been released at the time of writing, for the purpose of analysis the UNDP report uses data based on the 1998 census.
9 There is an important distinction to be made between hope translated into action, and patriotism that evokes sentiments of hope. In our work, for instance, the