failed in two important operations: the attempt to take the fortress at Latrun and the assault on the Old City of Jerusalem.

On July 18, Count Bernadotte was able to arrange a second ceasefire (though IDF forces would continue in their unsuccessful efforts to capture Latrun for two more days). This time, the ceasefire was of unlimited duration, and there were hopes that it would represent a permanent end to the conflict.