Supervision Organization (UNTSO) was allowed to send peacekeeping troops to the region to prevent new conflicts and to supervise the armistice agreements.

Prime Minister Ben-Gurion made it clear that he did not regard the Green Line as a fixed and final definition of the border of the new State of Israel, insisting that it must not be "construed in any sense as a political or territorial border." Instead, the final borders of the new state would be established only by the conclusion of long-term peace treaties between Israel and its Arab neighbors.