ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In acknowledging all those without whose inspiration, encouragement and persistence this book would not have been written, foremost is my publisher, David Davidar, who first broached the subject. Since then, I have been constantly encouraged by him to push the envelope in an attempt to tell the story of what really happened in the folds of the High Himalayas.

Growing up in the insulated world of the army, nothing matters more than the regiment and the battalion, even to the families. The events of 1962 could never ever leave us and impacted us in many different ways. In the immediate aftermath of the tragic events, Lieutenant Colonel Brahmanand Avasthy's family came to stay with us. After the ceasefire, Colonel Avasthy and his entire party of 168 men were intercepted by the Chinese and gunned down in cold blood near the Lagyala Gompa. Over the years, Mrs Avasthy became one of the symbols of the Rajput Regiment and I owe a lot to her for keeping the flame of 1962 burning in me. I also had the benefit of possessing the notes prepared by Lieutenant Colonel Maha Singh Rikh, the commanding officer of 2 Rajput, which he had handed over to my father shortly after his repatriation from the POW camp in China. I am grateful to Lieutenant Colonel Gurdial Singh and Brigadier Bhup Singh, 2 Rajput, for their detailed inputs. Colonel Mustasad Ahmad who wrote a book on the history of the Rajput regiment, also generously shared his notes that helped
