4 Gosse, “The African American Press Greets the Cuban Revolution,” pp. 277–8.
5 Clytus, Black Man in Red Cuba, pp. 157–8.
6 Brent, Long Time Gone, p. 145.
7 Brent, Long Time Gone, pp. 150, 151.
8 Brent, Long Time Gone, p. 203.
9 Brent, Long Time Gone, p. 174.
10 Sawyer, Racial Politics in Post-Revolutionary Cuba, p. 100.
11 Kainz and Vernon-Feagans, “The ecology of early reading development for children in poverty.” See also Kozol, The Shame of the Nation; Frankenberg, Lee, and Orfield, A Multiracial Society with Segregated Schools; Orfield and Lee, Why Segregation Matters; Orfield and Yun, Resegregation in American Schools.
12 de la Fuente, “Race and Discrimination in Cuba’s Special Period,” p. 319.
13 de la Fuente, “Race and Discrimination in Cuba’s Special Period,” p. 319.
14 de la Fuente, “Race and Discrimination in Cuba’s Special Period,” p. 319.
15 Moore, Castro, the Blacks, and Africa, p. 16.
16 Sawyer, Racial Politics in Post-Revolutionary Cuba, p. xx.
17 Moore, Castro, the Blacks and Africa, p. 28.
18 Sawyer, Racial Politics in Post-Revolutionary Cuba, p. 6.
19 Smith and Padula, Sex and Revolution, p. 45.
20 Randall, To Change the World, pp. 103–4.
21 Family Code, Article 27.
22 Smith and Padula, Sex and Revolution, chapters 8–9.
23 Safa, The Myth of the Male Breadwinner, p. 154.
24 Smith and Padula, Sex and Revolution, p. 133.
25 Benjamin, Collins and Scott, No Free Lunch, p. 28.
26 The American Psychological Association defined homosexuality as a psychiatric disorder until 1973. Despite the prominence of a gay rights movement in the United States, the United States did not completely decriminalize homosexuality until 2003, and continues to