14 Leiner, “The 1961 Cuban National Literacy Campaign,” pp. 174–5.

15 See Quiroz, “Martí in Cuban Schools,” in Font and Quiroz, The Cuban Republic and José Martí, p. 81.

16 Feinsilver, Healing the Masses, p. 32.

17 Fidel Castro speech, September 28, 1960, cited in Fagen, Transformation of Political Culture, p. 69.

18 Fagen, Transformation of Political Culture, pp. 70–1.

19 Fagen, Transformation of Political Culture, p. 73.

20 March 1968 speech, quoted in Benjamin, Collins, and Scott, No Free Lunch, p. 110.

21 Alfredo Prieto, “Otra vez los soviéticos,” July 3, 2009, http://7dias.com.do/app/article.aspx?id=54772.

22 Eckstein, Back from the Future, pp. 47, 58.

23 Domínguez, Cuba: Order and Revolution, p. 202.

24 Benjamin, Collins and Scott, No Free Lunch, chapter 5.

25 Feinsilver, Healing the Masses, p. 37.

26 Feinsilver, “Cuban Medical Diplomacy.”

27 Kozol, Children of the Revolution, pp. 105–6.

28 Dilla Alfonso, “Cuba: The Changing Scenarios of Governability,” p. 60.

29 Roca, “The Comandante in His Economic Labyrinth,” p. 91. He describes rectification as “centralist, personalist, anti-market, anti-incentive, with heavy emphasis on ideological and political values.”

30 See LeoGrande and Thomas, “Cuba’s Quest for Economic Independence”; Eckstein, Back from the Future, chapter 3. Eckstein concludes that “a major reason for launching the ‘rectification process’ was fiscal” (p. 79).

31 Lockwood, Castro’s Cuba, Cuba’s Fidel, p. 136.

32 Fornet, “El quinquenio gris: revisitando el término.”

33 González Echevarría, “Criticism and Literature in Revolutionary Cuba,” p. 168. For other summaries of Cuba’s cultural policies and cultural production since the revolution, see Craven, “Cuban Art and Culture”; Ripoll, “Writers and Artists in Today’s Cuba”; Casal, “Literature and Society.”