I am extremely grateful to my doctoral committee, who guided and encouraged me in my graduate studies at the University of Michigan. I thank Penny Von Eschen, a phenomenal advisor and advocate. Penny's practice of lifelong mentorship, critical engagement, and compassionate care inspire me to be a better writer and teacher. Her multiple close readings of each chapter, our time spent on transatlantic phone calls, and our trips to archives and public sites of memory in Berlin and Los Angeles have all prepared me for a path of scholarship and engagement. Michael Awkward's encouragement from my first days of graduate school enabled me to have courage to go out on a limb with ideas, and his questions continue to prompt some of my most fruitful critical travels. Sara Blair showed me how to construct aspirational bibliographies and animate close readings of texts, images, and archives and invited me into new ways of seeing and sensing. Amy Sara Carroll was a sage teacher and an architect of transformative thoughts who had time and time again renewed my sense of purpose. Martin Klimke was an invaluable interlocutor who actively created pathways for me to follow. Major thanks to others who impacted my experience at Michigan, including faculty and staff members Paul Anderson, Matthew Briones, Matthew Countryman, Angela Dillard, Kevin Gaines, Kristin Hass, June Howard, Elizabeth James, David Halperin, Lawrence La Fountain-Stokes, Marlene Moore, Nadine Naber, Damani Partridge, Chaquita Willis, Magdalena Zaborowska, and many others.

At Michigan, I was quite fortunate to have been a part of a supportive graduate community. I thank the members of my writing group—Matthew Blanton, Tayana Hardin, and Grace Sanders Johnson—for being so visionary, loving, consistent, fierce, and always of superhero caliber. Outside this writing group, I am so grateful for a treasured group of friends made in Ann Arbor, including Annah MacKenzie, Robert LeVertis Bell, Saida Grundy, Jen Guerra, Jina Kim, Katherine Lennard, Afia Ofori-Mensa, Rachel Afi Quinn, Claire Rice, Wendy Sung, Urmila Venkatesh, Kiara Vigil, and Colleen Woods. While in Berlin, I benefited from gracious and wise friends who invited me to navigate the city on their terms, including Bill Van Parys, Oliver "Dr. Pong" Miller, Magnus Rosengarten, and Silke Hackenesch.

My graduate studies at the University of Michigan were generously supported by the Rackham Graduate School, the Department of American Culture, and the Department of Afroamerican and African Studies. This
