with your spectacular gifts of creativity and music that was a soundtrack to my research.

I extend my deepest gratitude to friends who have shown me the most wonderful forms of love and belief in my life's work. Much appreciation to my dear friend Anna Morin, the first person to encourage me to write a book and believe I could actually do that. Thank you to many great friends, including Anna Aagenes, Titilola Bakare, Ryan Barrett, Ellery Biddle, Josh Buono, Gillian Cassell-Stiga, Erica Chapman, Liz Chernett, Anne Cooper, Elizabeth Cooper, Natalie Fabe Ubias, Jessica Garz, Cassidy Hartmann, Zack Hill, Claire Laver, Matt Leiker, Elizabeth Spector Louden, Beth Millstein, Stephan Nicoleau, Dan Rainer, Sara Schwartz, Tiffany Tavarez, Carmen Winant, Zach Zinn, and many others for sharing this journey with me and continually raising me up.

Much appreciation to my dear extended family—including the Brodys, Gilmores, Libous, Shanks, and Rosenbaums. I treasure all of you, and your support means so much to me. I am privileged to have more family in Melanie and Victor Skypski and their amazing kids and grandkids. To my late grandmother Claire Farber, cousin Joel Rosenbaum, and aunt Libby Rosenbaum, each of whom passed away during the writing of this book, I hope I honor your legacy with work inspired by your memory.

Finally, I am so grateful for my brother Ivan Farber and his wife, Wendy Farber, who so generously share their kind spirit and joyful outlook with me and inspire me to be a better person. To their son, my nephew Sam Farber, you are a special thinker with super smarts and a giant heart. I hope all of your dreams come true. To my parents, Ruth and Barry Farber, you are sublime and the greatest people I know. Thank you for my education, on all levels, and for being so kind and true. And to Aaron, my husband (and our dog Ziggy), you inspire me every day. You make me so happy, grateful, and full. This is for you.