Shinkichi Tajiri's multiple Berlin Wall projects continued to morph in the post-Wende years, as they had through the 1970s and 1980s. Berlin remained a space of conceptual and site-specific engagement for him, due to his established deep connections to the city. Tajiri retired from his post at the Hochschule der Künste in February 1989. To mark the occasion, several generations of students who made up the Klase Tajiri at the school produced
