5. “Berlin Salutes Robert Kennedy; He Vows Support,” New York Times, February 23, 1962, 1.
6. Höhn and Klimke, Breath of Freedom, 6.
7. Said, “Traveling Theory,” 196. For more on transnational travel and critical race perspectives, see Elam and Jackson, Crossroads in Global Performance and Popular Culture; Gaines, American Africans in Ghana; and Plummer, Rising Wind.
8. This includes Manghani, Image Critique and the Fall of the Berlin Wall; Pugh, Architecture, Politics, and Identity in Divided Berlin; and Sonnevend, Stories without Borders.
9. Boym, Future of Nostalgia, xviii.
10. Daum, Kennedy in Berlin, 36–37.
11. Daum, “America’s Berlin,” 51; Daum, Kennedy in Berlin, 39–41.
12. Ladd, Ghosts of Berlin, 4; see also Taylor, Berlin Wall.
13. U.S. Congress, Congressional Record, September 1961, vol. 107, pt. 14. For more on the expanding role of television in American life during the early 1960s, see Watson, Expanding Vista.
14. Von Eschen, Satchmo Blows Up the World, 11–12.
15. For more on regimes of border control in East Germany, see Funder, Stasiland.
16. William Tuohy, “Honecker Told of Need for Reforms: Gorbachev Urges Him to Accept Reality; Protests in Cities,” Los Angeles Times, October 8, 1989. For other renditions of “We Shall Overcome” in East Berlin, see Dunaway, How Can I Keep from Singing?, 320, and Janik, Recomposing German Music, 286.
17. Kurin, Smithsonian’s History of America, 500–505.
18. Clover, 1989, 13.
19. For more on the pieces of the Berlin Wall installed around the United States and associations with Cold War memory, see Wiener, How We Forgot the Cold War.
20. Those included in the long list of American cultural producers mentioned here—as well as others not listed, those whose stories I did not discover during the course of my research or those who carry other transnational identifications with the city—also merit their own prolonged studies. For more on visual artists and their projects from this list, see Farber, Wall in Our Heads.
21. Mesch, Modern Art at the Berlin Wall, 5.
22. Anzaldúa, Borderlands/La Frontera, 25.
23. Braun, City of Exiles, 15.
24. Friedman, Covert Capital, 14.
25. Tillet, Sites of Slavery, 11.

Chapter 1

1. For more on the construction of the Berlin Wall, see Harrison, Driving the Soviets Up the Wall; Taylor, Berlin Wall; and Kempe, Berlin 1961. For more on the experience and impact of African American GIs in Germany, see Höhn and Klimke, Breath of Freedom.
2. Freed, Made in Germany, 88.
3. For more on Freed in Germany, see “Open Door: Leonard Freed in Germany,” in Freed, Ebner, and Farber, Re-Made, 17–22.
4. Oltmans, Memoires, 252. I thank Frank Kelderman for his translation assistance. For more on U.S. military and Elvis Presley in Germany, see Wiener, How We Forgot the Cold War, 166–80; Höhn, GIs and Fräuleins, 55–59; and Schröer, Private Elvis, 68–69.
5. Neither Freed’s private notes nor the photograph at its highest magnification bear any clear indication of the name on the soldier’s uniform. Repeated attempts were made to identify the subject with U.S. veterans’ groups and local historians in Berlin. Retired colonel Verner N. Pike of the Berlin U.S. Military Veterans’ Association confirmed the soldier’s battle group and infantry status via email, in Verner N. Pike, email message to research assistant, February 10, 2014.
6. Contact Sheets: 65-1-5-39, LFP. The date of this photograph has been previously listed in multiple publications and exhibitions as 1962 or 1965. According to my review of Freed’s vintage