contact sheets, the image was taken in 1961. Freed had changed his notation system in 1970 when he joined Magnum as an associate. All of his German images from 1958 to 1965 were relabeled as "1965." The original contact sheet bears an additional marking on its back denoting its original date. The timing of this photograph was further corroborated through Oltmans's journal and interviews with Leonard's widow, Brigitte Freed.

7. Freed, Black in White America, 10.

8. Ibid.

9. Freed, Ewing, and van Sinderen, Worldview, 14–15.

10. Brian Norman and Piper Kendrix Williams define segregation as "a diverse set of cultural practices, ethnic experiences, historical conditions, political ideologies, municipal planning schemes, and de facto social systems, though it is primarily associated with the Jim Crow South and the era between the Supreme Court cases Plessy v. Ferguson (1896) and Brown v Board of Education (1954), when segregation was no longer the law of the land but a persistent de facto condition" (Norman and Williams, Representing Segregation, 1).

11. For more on Freedom Rides and domestic civil rights protests of 1961, see Arsenault, Freedom Riders, and Niven, Politics of Injustice.

12. For more on Langston Hughes's 1964 visit to West Berlin, see Hughes, "Berlin Today," Chicago Daily Defender, April 3, 1965, 8, and LHP.

13. U.S. Congress, Congressional Record, September 1961, vol. 107, pt. 14; Gurnee, "Jack Paar at the Berlin Wall," 52.

14. The story of a divided Berlin was compelling for numerous cultural figures to consider the metaphor of a walled city. For example, Miss Toni Fisher's Top 40 hit "West of the Wall" premiered in 1962. This song features Fisher reinventing one of her own melodies from an earlier song, "Toot Toot Amore," but redeploying it here with lyrics about lovers separated by the new Berlin Wall. In the song, Fisher "waits" for her lover in West Berlin: "That wall built of our sorrow / We know must have an end / Till then dream of tomorrow / When we meet again." The song reached no. 37 on the Billboard charts in a moment when the future status of the Wall was uncertain; the notion that the Wall would come down soon was a political possibility.

15. Taylor, Berlin Wall, 240.

16. By December 15, 1961, American filmgoers were provided with their most extended cultural glimpse of the Berlin Crisis with the release of Billy Wilder's comedy One, Two, Three. The fact that the movie was filmed in part on location in Berlin earlier in the summer of 1961 but released after the construction of the Wall made it historically significant and strange. Wilder presents a parodied depiction of Berlin as a crossroads of multiple divisions of national and historical nature, including those based on intertwined Cold War/civil rights discourses. For example, Wilder positions some of his film's humor through tropes of regional and racial strife in the United States. See Wilder, One, Two, Three.

17. "Rowan Urges Continued Fight on Bias; Warns 'Easing Up' Would Be Betrayal," Chicago Daily Defender, August 24, 1961, 9; "ICC Ruling Abolishes Bus Terminal Jim Crow," Los Angeles Sentinel, September 28, 1961, A1; "Troup Addresses Ft. Valley State Vespers Audience," Atlanta Daily World, October 6, 1961, 3. See also the editorial cartoon included in the Chicago Daily Defender on September 9, 1961, featuring a caricature of Jim Crow slamming down a newspaper with headlines that include "Dixie Schools Integrate Quietly," "Russia Tests A-Bomb," and "East-West German Wall."

18. "The Wall," Pittsburgh Courier, January 20, 1962, A9. Another Pittsburgh Courier staff editorial, published the week before on January 13, 1962, was titled, "The Walls Are Crumbling," without explicit reference to Berlin.

19. Kennedy, Kennedy, and Walther, John F. Kennedy, Robert F. Kennedy, 23.

20. "Tear Down 'Berlin Wall' of Race Hatred, Governor Kerner Urges," Chicago Daily Defender, July 2, 1963, 3; "Adlai Speaks Out," Chicago Daily Defender, July 2, 1963, 12; "Mrs. Tinglof