38. While on this trip, King found out he would be the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize. King traveled to Berlin from September 13 to 15, at the special invitation of Berlin mayor Willy Brandt. King participated as the prominent speaker for several West Berlin cultural events, including a memorial service to President Kennedy and the opening of the Berlin Jazz Festival. In addition to being an esteemed guest of West Berlin, as further evidenced by his signature in the city's "Golden Book," King also crossed into East Berlin, where he preached at the St. Mary's and Sophia churches, with back-to-back evening speeches. He did not bring his passport with him to Checkpoint Charlie but was let through with his American Express card to East Berlin by guards aware of his intent to speak there. As Maria Höhn and Martin Klimke suggest, "King's visit to the front line of Cold War Europe gave him new perspectives to draw upon when he continued his civil rights struggle back at home" (Höhn and Klimke, Breath of Freedom,105). The Berlin Wall would also soon become a part of King's lexicon to help picture segregation in the United States, including particular instances in Philadelphia and Chicago. In a 1965 editorial King writes of Philadelphia's then-segregated Girard College and its outer wall: "In this city known as the cradle of liberty … this wall is symbolic in the minds of many Negroes and freedom-minded whites—symbolic as the Berlin Wall is symbolic" (Martin Luther King Jr., "My Dream," Chicago Daily Defender, December 25, 1965, 10). In a 1966 article about housing protests in Chicago, the Chicago Defender cites him: "Housing developments along Chicago's S. State St. create a 'Berlin Wall situation like nothing I've ever seen before'" ("'Chicago Wall': Dr. King Talks in Lansing," Chicago Daily Defender, March 12, 1966, 1).

39. The image also serves as the cover of Pillar of Fire, the second volume of Pulitzer Prize–winner Taylor Branch's three-part biography of King.

40. While hospitalized in 1959, Freed studied August Sander's work of "young people with scarred faces" in the November issue of Swiss publication DU. See Freed, Ewing, and van Sinderen, Worldview, 305.

41. In 1967, Freed also was an officially credentialed photographer at the funeral for former West German chancellor Konrad Adenauer. The resulting images were later included in his Made in Germany portfolio.

42. Freed, Ewing, and van Sinderen, Worldview, 105.

43. U.S. Kerner Commission, Report.

44. For more on the protest movement contesting militarism in West Germany, see Klimke, Other Alliance.

45. Freed, Black in White America, 4.

46. Letter from Brother, April 1968 (uncataloged), LFP.

47. Mel Watkins, "Diversity of Experience," New York Times Book Review, April 27, 1969, 6.

48. In 2010, Getty Publications republished Black in White America after its forty years of being out of print and in conjunction with their Engaged Observers exhibition. Curator Brett Abbott writes in his foreword to the Getty reprinting of Black in White America, "More than forty years later the Berlin wall has come and gone, but the issue of race in America remains ingrained in the national conscience" (Freed and Getty Museum, Black in White America, 3).

49. Freed, Made in Germany, 4.

50. Gene Thornton, "Pictures You Won't See in a Travel Folder," New York Times, May 30, 1971, D14.

51. Freed, Made in Germany, 84.

52. Ibid., 80.

53. Ibid.

Chapter 2

1. Egon Bahr, West German chancellor Willy Brandt's press assistant, delivered the talk "Change through Convergence" in the summer of 1963, which Frederick Taylor claims "represented the beginning of a new era of relations between East and West Germany, and the beginning of what