omissions, redactions, and disappearances of health-related files within these law enforcement agencies' extensive surveillance records. For more on Robeson's health prior to East Berlin, see Duberman, Paul Robeson, 498–521, and Robeson, Undiscovered Paul Robeson, 308–30.

31. Eslanda Robeson, "Paul Robeson's Wife Tells Why He 'Sneaked' to East Germany," Afro American, November 2, 1963; Eslanda Robeson, "Wife Reveals How Robeson's Friends Helped, 'Escape' Reads Like Movie Thriller," Afro American, November 9, 1963; Eslanda Robeson, "Mrs. Robeson, in East Berlin, Says: 'Only Trying to Give Paul a Rest,'" Afro American, November 16, 1963.

32. In the Robeson archive at Howard University, a folder of unattributed photographs from the 1963 East Berlin trip includes one photo, taken on August 28, 1963. The three are pictured within feet of the pillars of the gate, though no visible aspect of the border wall is in the frame. See NUCMC #DCLV96-A948, PERP.

33. Robeson was honored as an honorary citizen of East Germany and received accolades there related to his life's work. In 1965 the Paul Robeson Archive was founded at the Academy of Arts in East Berlin, and on April 8, 1968, the GDR held a cultural symposium honoring his seventieth birthday, featuring American singer Bernice Reagon and an exhibition on his resistance to fascism at Bahnhof Friedrichstrasse. Later, on April 13 and 14, 1971, a symposium assessing his legacy was held at the Deutschen Akademie der Künste. After Robeson's death in 1976, a street in East Berlin's Prenzlauer Berg was renamed Paul-Robeson-Strasse, and his face appeared on an East German stamp with the words, "For Peace against Racism, Paul Robeson, 1898–1976." Paul-Robeson-Strasse remains in reunified Berlin. See PERP; Höhn and Klimke, Breath of Freedom, 129–32; and Grossman and Solomon, Crossing the River, 173–88.

34. An added layer is that both of their respective German state hosts later extensively memorialized Kennedy and Robeson as American Berliner visitors, with posthumous street names and educational institutions and other cultural rites tied to their memory.

35. As Davis states in her autobiography, at least one of the writers was paid by the FBI to write the article. See Davis, Angela Davis, 216.

36. Jackson, Soledad Brother.

37. For more on Davis and prison abolition, see Davis, Abolition Democracy.

38. Smith, Prison and the American Imagination, 67. In 1927, American socialist and unionist Eugene Debs wrote Walls and Bars: Prisons and Prison Life in The "Land of the Free" about his time being incarcerated under the Espionage Act. Italian Marxist Antonio Gramsci published a series of epistolary exchanges between him and his sister-in-law in which he writes, "My practicality consists in this, in the knowledge that if you beat your head against the wall it is your head which breaks and not the wall—that is my strength, my only strength" (Gramsci, Modern Prince, 56).

39. Bernstein, America Is the Prison, 183–84.

40. Berger, Captive Nation, 114; "Statement of Principles: Prison Action Conference," Freedom Archives, http://www.freedomarchives.org/Documents/Finder/DOC510_scans/Prison_Conditions/510.tear.down.walls.1972.pdf. See also the poster in the collection of Oakland Museum of California titled, "Free all political prisoners: Angela: Bobby." Its description reads, "Poster has a red brick wall with a blue fist rising in front of it in the center. Over the fist is a small blue chain, and under the brick wall is a large blue chain. Above the poster reads, 'Free all political prisoners/ Angela/ Bobby.' Along the bottom is 'Young Workers Liberation League'" (All Of Us Or None Archive, Gift of the Rossman Family, 2010.54.1232).

41. Prominent visual representations of Davis, on materials ranging from an FBI Most Wanted poster to "Free Angela" paraphernalia to sprawling media coverage of her trial to the covers of her books and pamphlets, all fueled the extreme notoriety of her case. Davis writes of this in her oft-reprinted essay "Afro Images."